"The Administrative State, this composition of the administrative and dependent states, will never stop of its own will. For it shares the nature of the tiger. Our Administrative State is a creature of power, and such creatures never divest themselves freely of power—ever.

This Administrative State will not stop until it is forced to stop by what remains of the nation's democratic processes: the sacred legacy of our Constitution. This tiger must be voted back behind the sensible barricades by which our nation was framed."

— RICHARD C. LYONS, SHADOWS OF THE ACROPOLIS, P. 222
